

Blue Turf Creation Myth

By Marilyn K. Moody

And to our land of potatoes came a wise and brave Athletic Director, called Bleymaier.
It was a time of little money and a time
of lousy and losing football teams.
Fans were discouraged and lost
hope of ever creating a football dynasty.
Then the great Bleymaier, clad only in Bronco gear, proclaimed:

Let there be blue turf.
Let our football field be like no other in college football.
Let ESPN marvel at the brightness of the blue.
Let our rivals curse the blue and perish on top of the blue.
Let it be true "Ducks do Crash on the Blue."
Let our blue uniforms and turf camouflage and confuse.
Let no one else build a blue football field.
Let us trademark the blue turf.

GO BRONCOS!!

Some wanted to fire Bleymaier and his President,
but they prevailed and became praised as geniuses and prophets.
The Bronco Nation grew strong and the kingdom of Boise became known for its football warriors and people made pilgrimages to view the blue turf and walk on the sacred field and buy many many blue T-shirts.

And so the blue turf was born, and the blue turf will forever for all eternity remain.

Amen.
